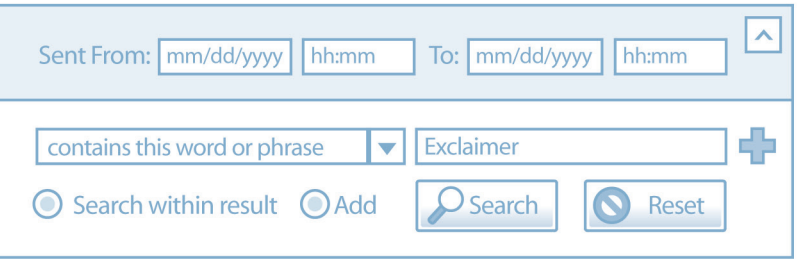
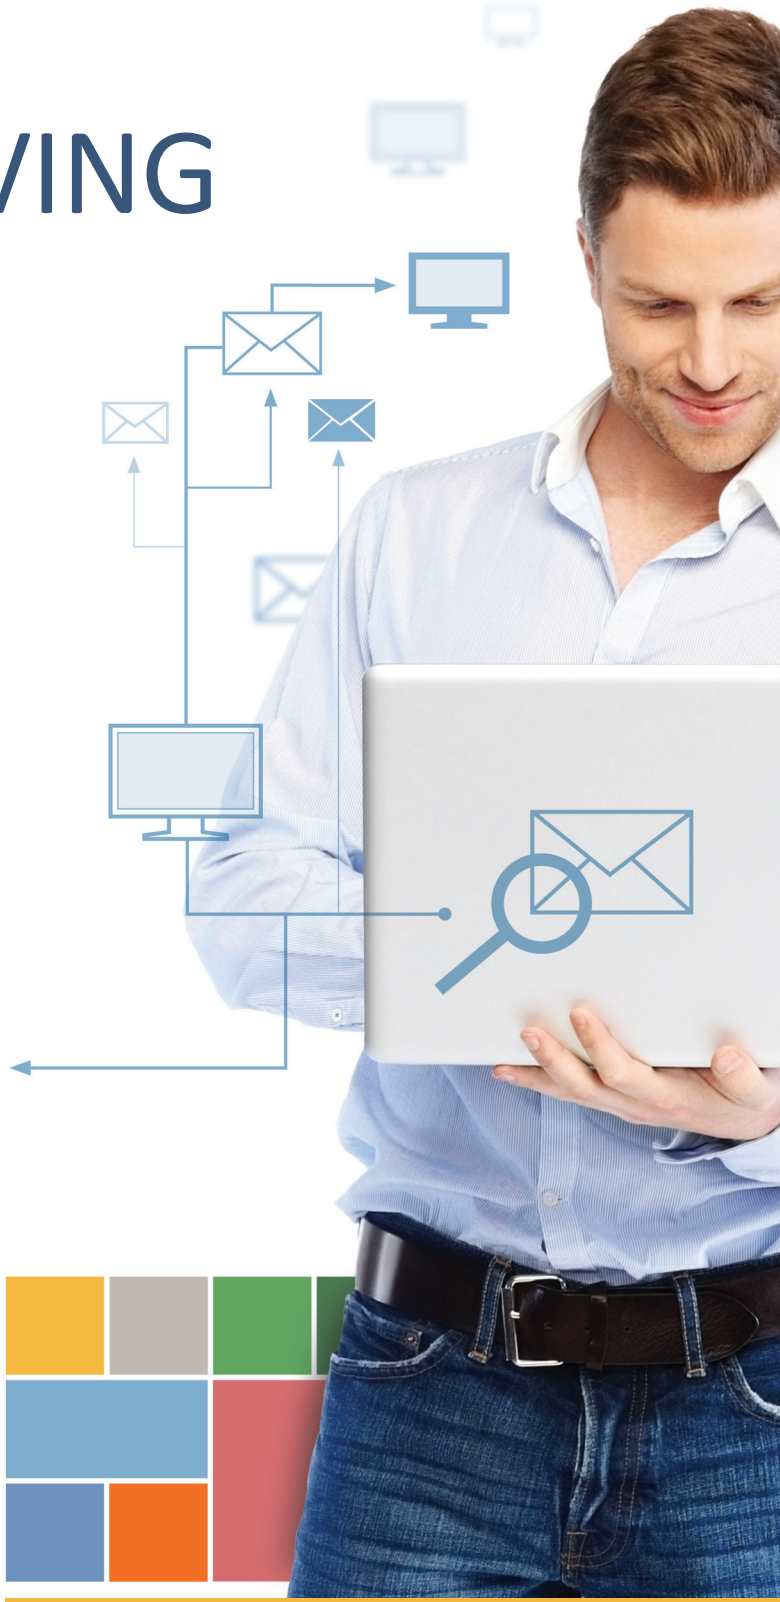
Why You Need EMAIL ARCHIVING

Your organization runs on email and you generate lots of it. But, like pages on the Internet, emails are unstructured and difficult to classify. So, how can you access all that rich information quickly and simply?

Like the Internet, a search based approach is the only way – but your Microsoft Exchange store wasn't designed to keep your entire email history and it wasn't built for fast searching – that's what email archiving is for.





And it isn't just IT that feels the benefit. Everyone across your organization wins from having an email archive:

- IT get an easy way to preserve users' entire email histories while still maintaining a high performing Exchange Server and eliminating any need for PST files
- All end users get fantastically fast and intuitive search driven access to every email they've ever sent or received improving productivity
- Sales and support managers get access to complete customer email trails and not just those they were copied in on
- Team leaders and middle managers gain staff oversight and monitoring
- Senior managers and business owners gain organizational insight as well as protection against legal action and undesirable or criminal activity on the part of their staff

It used to be true that only big organizations or those with a specific compliance need could afford this kind of functionality but that's no longer the case.

You don't need dedicated appliances any more and you don't need expensive database packages and the hardware platforms and maintenance skills to support them. Email archiving is available and affordable for everyone - right now.
